Chosen by the public from a field of 20 finalists from across the country, Rhodes Physical Therapy is the recipient of Web.com online marketing products and services valued at $25,000 – which is about 10 times the average small business annual media and marketing spend, according to advisory firm BJA/Kelsey's Local Commerce Monitor.

"Both the Web.com Tour and the Small Business of the Tournament are designed to help passionate professionals reach their potential," said David L. Brown, chairman, chief executive officer and president of Web.com. "Through our best-in-class advisors and marketing technologies, we look forward to helping Rhodes Physical Therapy improve its online presence, reach more customers, and connect more often with the customers it has."

"I always wanted to have a family business," says Rhodes Physical Therapy Founder Jon Rhodes. "I had to start from zero, and you're not really sure where the patients will come from, but going out and finding them has been a great experience. It will be amazing to redo our entire online presence, including redesigning our website, integrating the ability to make appointments, ask physical therapists questions and get advice."

On July 16, Rhodes automatically entered into the grand prize competition after receiving the Web.com Small Business of Tournament Award during the Utah Championship presented by Zions Bank.
