

Brown University Entrepreneurship Program and Web.com Announce Partnership

Web.com Designs and Hosts Website for Program; Offers Discounted Websites for Students, Alumni and Faculty; Provides Web Services to Winners of Annual Brown Business Plan Competition

ATLANTA, Aug 15, 2006 (PRIMEZONE via COMTEX News Network) -- Web.com, Inc. (Nasdaq:WWW), the leading destination for websites and web services, announced today that the company has partnered with Brown University's Entrepreneurship Program to design and host their website. The new website can be found at www.brownep.org and was designed for Brown students to foster entrepreneurial education and new businesses.

"As a Brown graduate and Board member, I know first hand the value of Brown's Entrepreneurship Program," stated Jeff Stibel, President and CEO, Web.com. "Brown offers a unique academic experience and its Entrepreneurship Program enables students to apply exciting new ideas into business applications."

In addition to creating the new website, Web.com is also offering all Brown University students, alumni and faculty with discounted web services, including website design, web hosting and eCommerce. Web.com is also sponsoring the Entrepreneurship Program and will provide web services to the winners of the Brown Business Plan competition which takes place annually during the spring semester.

"The Brown University Entrepreneurship Program is a wonderful platform for students to incubate their business ideas and make them a reality," stated Robby Klaber '07, Co-President of Brown University's Entrepreneurship Program. "We thank Web.com for the new website and the web services they are offering to our program and students. Together, Brown and Web.com are helping the next generation of entrepreneurs create the future of business and showcase their efforts online."
